angular features show through the k room garments. The hands, cwolin size, are encased in bandages. Iss Monsen rame to America two rs ago. As an immigrant she turned embroidery making soon after her ard in New York, working wherever could find work to do. Eventually met Miss Codding, who says that is one of a little band of missions without particular creed and oout any definite field in which to k. Miss Monsen joined the little I, of which they are now four in bington.

Mission Work Limited.

Miss Codding explained that their missionary work in Washington had been of limited character, because of the police regulations forbidding street services by wandering bands. Even in matters of work, according to Miss Codding, the trio of women await for instructions from above. instructions from above. It is said that the three women prayed every hour when alone in their room. Pellagra, the disease which is now causing worry for those who have the girl in charge at the hospital, is supposed to be the result of eating impure food, especially corn. It has always been a scourge in certain portions of Europe, notably in Italy.

In this country, the disease was discovered in the South in recent years, During the recent epidemic of pellagra

After reaching the Capital two months ago from New York the girl began to grow ill. The skin trouble became more pronounced and she ate so little that Miss Codding at one time almost forced her to drink a glass of milk. The young woman grew weaker and weaker as the wasting disease progressed until on July 4 she was sent to the hospital.

The band of traveling missionaries have no plans, according to Miss Codding. They intend to remain in Washington until "the call"is received to go clsewhere.

One denies tilat he can do this. But the State machine of the grand old Bay State and the voters of this fair Commonwealth contend that, when it comes to scholar and the clear enunciation of the most highly perfected phonograph known to modern times. He has the State machine running as he wants it and he has the promise of all the voters he needs, with some to spare. Mr. Ames seldom talks, and when he does talk he seems to be a little uncertain as to what he had better say, from which he was graduated as several sorts of an engineer. All this is to Mr. Ames' credit, but he says nothing of fancy, or that behind the hard gilt-having learned in his boyhood days all
